

Roman Catholics

The Roman Catholic Church is the biggest group of Christians in the world, with lots and lots of people belonging to it!

The Pope is the leader of all Catholics, like a king or queen but for the Church.

Catholics believe in one God, but that God is made up of three parts: the Father, the Son (Jesus), and the Holy Spirit.

There are seven special ceremonies called Sacraments that are really important to Catholics, like Baptism and Eucharist.

Catholics believe that God talks to them through the Bible and also through the teachings of the Church over many, many years.

The most important thing Catholics do is go to Mass, where they believe the bread and wine turn into the actual body and blood of Jesus.

Catholics pray to special people called saints, and also to Mary, the mother of Jesus. They ask them to help talk to God for them.

Quakers

Quakers believe that everyone has a little bit of God inside them, like a tiny light.

They meet together in silence, waiting to feel that inner light and sometimes share what they feel.

Quakers try to be peaceful and kind to everyone, just like Jesus taught.

They don't have fancy churches or special leaders; everyone is equal.

Quakers believe in helping others and making the world a better place.

They try to live simple lives, not focusing too much on having lots of stuff.

Quakers believe in being honest and truthful, even when it's hard.

Church of England

The Church of England is the main church in England, kind of like the head of all the other churches.

They believe in God, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit, just like Catholics do.

They have special leaders called bishops and priests who help people learn about God.

They have beautiful churches all over England, some are really, really old!

They use a special book called the Book of Common Prayer when they pray together.

The Church of England is part of a bigger group of churches around the world called the Anglican Communion.

They believe in helping people and doing good things in the world.

Baptists

Baptists believe that you should only be baptised (dipped in water) when you're old enough to understand and choose to follow Jesus.

They think each church should make its own decisions, not be told what to do by a big group.

Baptists believe the Bible is the most important book and try to follow what it says.

They meet together to worship God, sing songs, pray, and learn from the Bible.

Baptists believe that Jesus died on the cross to save people from their sins.

They think it's really important to tell others about Jesus and how he can change their lives.

Baptists try to be kind and helpful to people, just like Jesus was.

Evangelicals

Evangelicals believe that the Bible is God's word and it's super important to read and follow it.

They think that everyone needs to hear about Jesus and how he can change their lives.

They love to sing worship songs and pray to God.

Evangelicals believe that Jesus died on the cross to save people from their sins.

They think it's important to live a life that pleases God and shows others how much they love Him.

They meet together in churches to learn about the Bible and encourage each other.

Evangelicals believe that when they die, they will go to heaven to be with Jesus forever.
